

Emergency Care

Emergency care encompasses the evaluation, management, and treatment of patients across the lifespan with unforeseen illness or injury of varying complexity. Emergency care is delivered by clinicians that are educated and trained to comprehensively address a wide variety of illnesses and injuries, ranging from resuscitation and stabilization of life-threatening health problems to management of minor injuries and illnesses. Emergency care is not defined by a practice setting, and takes place within urban, suburban, rural, and frontier/remote settings.